

Adapted export regulations at Lottum horse market

A new European Animal Health Law came into force in April 2021, affecting export policies at horse markets taking place in Lottum on 14 November. One aim of this regulation is to control the spread of any equine diseases by tracking animal movements.

How are horse markets affected?

In consultation with the Dutch Food and Consumer Product Safety Authority (NVWA), the following changes apply:

1. No direct market exports

Through 2019, it was possible to certify animals bought or destined for export to foreign countries at a market and then transport them to their new home immediately. To this end, our organisation held a one-day permit issued by the Ministry of Agriculture, Nature and Food Quality. Due to the new law, this permit is no longer available. Going forward, animals must be moved from the market to a holding and kept there for 48 hours before they may be exported in the usual manner. For example, a buyer and seller may agree to keep an animal at the seller's home or premises.

2. No direct foreign market imports

Animals from abroad may not be transported directly to market. Instead, they must first be kept at a holding in the Netherlands for at least 48 hours and be accompanied by the correct documents.

3. Holding register during markets

Horse market organisers are required to maintain a holding register that records all animal movements on and off the holding. In other words, 'Where are the horses from and where are they going?' The NVWA must be provided with this register afterwards on request. The on-movements register records an animal's establishment of origin and chip number. The off-movements register records the chip number and destination. The traders themselves are responsible for ensuring this data is supplied and entered correctly. The organisation will record chip numbers for incoming animals by means of a chip scanner.

4. Every market must have a unique UBN number
